Calico House

1884

450 Ridge Road, Westminster

private

The Calico House is an 1884 frame farmhouse that shows the evolution of the regional farmhouse style during the late 19th century. Victorian characteristics include the ornamental window frames with pointed-arch lintels, and corbelled brick chimney. The house was built by Jacob Myerly who called it the Calico House because of its victorian paint color scheme.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

SUMMARY: The Calico House was built in 1884 by Jacob Myerly. A contemporary newspaper account states that it was called the Calico House because of its Victorian style paint scheme. The house is representative of the late 19th century farmhouse construction in this region.

DESCRIPTION: The Calico House is located on the west side of Maryland Route 27 about 3/4 of a mile south of Westminster. It is on a parcel of land adjoining the railroad overpass bridge on Route 27. The house sits back from the road on a level site.

The architecture of the Calico House shows the evolution of the regional farmhouse style during the Victorian period. While it retains the basic shape and scale of the regional style--two story height, gable roof, symmetrical facade and L-shaped plan--some of its details indicate the Victorian influences of the late 19th century, including the pointed-arch window frames, central chimney, and original paint scheme. The house retains its original features except for the paint scheme; the exterior is now covered with asphalt siding.

The Democratic Advocate of June 12, 1886 contains an article entitled "Parr's Ridge--The Residence of Jacob Myerly" that provides the following contemporary account of the Calico House:

"At the lower end of the farm, towards Spring Mill Station, is a handsome new dwelling house, built by Mr. Myerly in 1884. It is remarkable for the peculiarity of its finish, and its striking appearance, being painted in variegated colors. ~~it has a neat fancy porch in front and contains six~~ rooms, very conveniently arranged. The dimensions of this building are 16 feet by 16, the rear portion 28 by 16. The chimney runs up in the centre of the building, adding to its warmth and comfort in cold weather. It is occupied by Mr. John W. Zile, son-in-law of Mr. Myerly, who has added to the building a shed in the rear, a handsome barn, and has planted a young orchard of fruit trees, together with some trees for shade and ornament. He also purchased a lot on the opposite side of the road, on which he has erected a blacksmith shop, and where he industriously plies his calling. The premises are neatly enclosed by picket fence and whitewashed. Mr. Myerly facetiously calls the dwelling occupied by Mr. Zile, his 'Calico House,' on account of its variegated colors."
